In August of 2001 the Fire Department issued a Capital Expenditure Plan, which called for $8,384,000 in spending on equipment and facilities between 2003 and 2008. This figure includes equipment purchase, both for emergency response and administration, building maintenance and repair, and the consolidation of two existing stations in the southern part of the city into a new facility on Gorham Street. A breakdown is provided in the chart below.

The desire to relocate from the JFK building is driven by a number of factors. One is the inadequacy of the vehicle service center, which is shared with the Police Department, and is too small for today's fire engines. Another is the lack of parking space available in the lot behind the building, which is also shared with the Police Department. The general lack of office space, which affects all users of the Civic Center, is a third factor.

In September 2001, the department released a feasibility study for the South Lowell neighborhood. This study analyzed the cost of building a new station in order to consolidate the Gorham Ave. and Lawrence Street station, renovating both stations, or renovating and enlarging the Gorham Street station. The construction of a new station was estimated at approximately $4 million, while the other two options were estimated at $3.6 million. This higher cost for this project on the above chart represents an inflation-adjusted estimate.

11.2 LOWELL POLICE DEPARTMENT

The Lowell Police Department's Headquarters occupy 53,400 square feet in the John F. Kennedy Civic Center. In 1997, the LPD issued a Needs Assessment Study, covering the years 1997 – 2010. This document inventoried each of the functional units in the department, and their space and equipment needs. Much of the existing facilities in the JFK Civic Center are functionally obsolete, or approaching obsolescence, according to current needs and standards. Based on this analysis, the study concluded that a new headquarters building should be constructed, to replace the LPD's space in the JFK Civic Center. The study catalogues the space needs of a modern police headquarters, and recommends a 113,000 square foot building, on seven acres of land, at a cost of $19,600,000. This figure rises if a smaller site is chosen, due to the added costs of constructing a taller building.

The Eliot Center, at 10 Favor Street, houses a juvenile detention center operated by the Massachusetts Department of Youth Services and LPD gang activity offices. The neighborhood substations and other facilities operate out of space provided by other organizations, as shown below.

11.4 OTHER MUNICIPAL FACILITIES

Most city departments have offices in City Hall, located at 375 Merrimack Street. The Division of Planning and Development is located in the JFK Civic Center at 50 Arcand Drive. The Pollard Memorial Library, currently under renovation, is located adjacent to City Hall at 375 Merrimack Street. Departments whose responsibilities include operating and maintaining sites throughout the city typically have headquarters and garages located elsewhere. These are listed below.

- Parks Department – 133 Stedman Street (Headquarters), 95 West Sixth Street/10 Hampshire Street (Vacated)
- DPW – 276 Broadway (Headquarters), 1365 Middlesex Street (Garage)
- Senior Center - 412 Merrimack Street
- Water Division – 815 Pawtucket Boulevard (Headquarters)
- Waste Water Division – 415 First Street Boulevard

In addition to the City-owned property below, a number of City departments and programs occupy leased property, primarily in downtown locations. Lease agreements are generally for three-year terms.

11.5 HOSPITALS AND HEALTH CARE

LOWELL GENERAL HOSPITAL

Located at the former Fay Estate on Varnum Street in Pawtucketville, Lowell General Hospital was organized and incorporated in 1891. The facilities encompass ten buildings. The hospital has 200 licensed beds, 38 bassinets, a 21-bed Transitional Care Unit, Lowell General at Drum Hill and the Women's Imaging Centers of Lowell and Chelmsford. Lowell General had over 12,000 admissions in 2001, nearly 181,000 outpatients visits (including over 46,000 Emergency Room visits), and performed over 7000 surgeries. The hospitals staff includes 417 medical staff, 430 nurses, and 895 other positions.

SAINTS MEMORIAL MEDICAL CENTER

The SMMC campus is located in Lower Belvidere, off East Merrimack Street. The former St. Joseph's Hospital at 220 Pawtucket Street houses a number of medical facilities, including a walk-in emergency care center and dialysis clinic operated by Saints. Saints also operates a dialysis center in Methuen and a Family Health Center in Tewksbury.
